Refurbishment of a Grade I listed Georgian Bath-stone townhouse in the centre of Bath.

The building had previously been used as a hotel and the project involved the removal of numerous partition walls and dropped ceilings and the removal of several small en-suite bathrooms.

A ground floor partition and bathroom was demolished to restore the dining room to its original grand proportions; and the opening from the hallway was restored in its original location.

Two bathrooms were removed at first floor level and the drawing room was knocked through to the 'withdrawing room'/library with the addition of a grand pair of restored Georgian 'Wedding Doors'.

Modern radiators were replaced with cast iron radiators located in the window niches, and wide plank solid oak flooring was laid throughout the principal floors.

Missing ornamental detail was re-introduced to the house: decorative plasterwork cornices and ceiling roses, timber dado rails, and a pair of new marble fireplaces were commissioned for the drawing room and library.

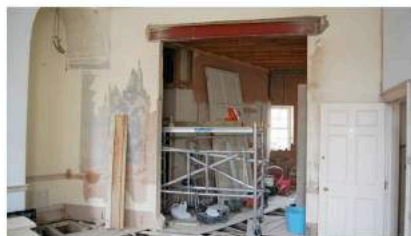

The renewed Georgian splendour of the principle rooms contrasts with contemporary bath and shower suites with natural stone flooring and wall tiles. Modern audio, lighting and communication wiring has been introduced to the house..
